

Texas Liver Institute & UT Health San Antonio Present

6th APP, Nursing and Primary Care Liver Conference

Saturday, May 21, 2022

Jointly Provided by:

WELCOME MESSAGE

Welcome to the 6th APP, Nursing and Primary Care Liver Conference.

There remains a continuing need for education of primary care professionals relating to acute and chronic liver conditions since you are the first line of medical care for many patients with undiagnosed disease. It is important for you to have the knowledge surrounding these diseases in order to confidently, and competently, manage your patients and recognize which patients are more advanced and need to be referred to a specialist.

After attending the conference, you should be better able to:

- Identify signs and symptoms of fatty liver disease and know when patients should be referred to liver disease specialists for further follow up.
- Recall lab tests relating to viral hepatitis (B, C and D) and understand which lab results signal need for treatment and/or vaccination.
- Recall critical screenings necessary in patients with cirrhosis as well as recognizing the complications related to portal hypertension.
- Recognize that patients with liver cancer need a multi-disciplinary team approach to optimize their long-term prognosis and that liver transplant options may exist.

We invite you to be an active participant and to ask questions during the panel discussions. We hope you enjoy this conference and welcome your feedback on how we can improve for future conferences. Please provide feedback to education@txliver.com.
